CAREER AND JOB FAIR TIPS

Take 5 minutes before visiting companies to review the list of attending exhibitors and note their locations. If there is a long line at one exhibitor, move to the next one on your list. Make a note to re-visit those that you missed.

Act professionally. You have come “dressed for success”—as always, good grooming and hygiene are essential. The top twelve inches of your body are the most noticeable, not only for neatness and style, but also for anything distracting like jewelry, heavy makeup, or “messy” hairstyles.

Show interest and enthusiasm by smiling and speaking clearly. Walk confidently, with good posture. Make direct eye contact and shake hands firmly. Have a positive greeting: "Hello, I’m Chris Smith. I’m concentrating in corporate finance and will graduate ---. It’s good to see your company on campus. I’m interested in talking with you about ..." Tell them what interests you about their company and/or industry.

Answer questions clearly and concisely. Good communication skills are very important.

Ask appropriate questions. (For example, don’t ask about salary, and don’t ask what the company does if the answer is in the published information.)

Ask if they’re taking résumés. Ask for a business card (you’ll want to write a letter and send a résumé to those that especially interest you). Thank them for their time. Pick up company information too, not just give-aways.

If the company is not recruiting for your area of interest, ask how and who you might be able to speak with about such an opportunity.

In today's Web environment, scale matters. Through massive concentrations of shared data, applications and connections, communities can leverage the Web infrastructure to create new services, generate new operating efficiencies and develop new relevance to users.

This emerging concept of Web scale—where systems are built and services delivered in the Internet 'cloud'—is strongly aligned with OCLC's historic mission. For more than 40 years, OCLC and its members have been building a library cooperative and managing a computer network that creates economies of scale, enabling more and more libraries to reduce costs and share resources.

Now OCLC is introducing next-generation services using 21st century Web technology that will greatly amplify the power of library cooperation. By connecting more libraries and more records, there will be more network effects and more value for the cooperative. Some services will interconnect in the cloud through machine-to-machine interfaces. Others will reside where they are technically most appropriate, at the local, group or global levels.

The vision is to use Web scale to deliver library resources, services and expertise at the point of need, within user workflows and in a manner that users want and understand. The Web-scale model will encourage users to participate in a network and community of libraries by enabling them to reuse information and socialize around information. It also will create a powerful, unified presence for libraries on the Web and give users a local, group and global reach.

TEACH FOR AMERICA

Filling high-need classrooms with passionate, high-achieving individuals who will do whatever it takes to help their students succeed is a critical piece of our approach—but it's not enough to reach educational equity. Success relies on the work corps members do as alumni after their two-year commitment, from within the field of education and other sectors, to continue to expand opportunities for all students.

We recruit a diverse group of leaders with a record of achievement who work to expand educational opportunity, starting by teaching for two years in a low-income community. We provide intensive training, support and career development that helps these leaders increase their impact and deepen their understanding of what it takes to eliminate educational inequity. A growing movement of leaders, nearly 32,000 strong, works at every level of education, policy and other professions, to ensure that all children can receive an excellent education.

As a corps member, you will be a full-time, salaried employee of your school district. Your salary and benefits will be the same as other beginning teachers in that district. Salaries range from $25,500 to $51,000, depending on where our corps members teach across the country.
