BNRC Staffer Todd Suddeth Selected to Win Award

On Tuesday, August 6, 2013, Todd Suddeth, program director for the Todd A. Bell National Resource Center on the African American Male, along with six others, received the Jim Stevens Award from the Department of Recreational Sports. This award is presented annually to individuals who have provided above and beyond support to the department during the past academic year.

Todd was nominated by the Competitive Sports area within the Department of Recreational Sports for bringing in students from the Bell National Resource Center’s Early Arrival Program and using its resources. One activity is the annual basketball tournament that is in its fifth year. Bell National Resource students will participate in other activities hosted by the Department of Recreational Sports throughout the year.

Congratulations to Todd on this well-deserved award.
